The Curiosity Carnival – a free community event on Friday 29 September 2017

On Friday 29 September, the University of Oxford will be holding the Curiosity Carnival – our biggest ever public engagement with research event. With a programme of hundreds of free activities, the Carnival will celebrate, question and debate the many ways that research affects all our lives. Taking place across central Oxford at the University's gardens, libraries and museums, there will be fun for all ages and interests, including talks, games, live experiments, dance, music, poetry and a programme of street activities in Broad Street.

In association with the Curiosity Carnival, Oxford is also hosting the 2017 Night of Heritage Light on the same night. Some of the city's most iconic sites will be lit up with fun, creative designs: Ashmolean Museum, Museum of Natural History, Museum of the History of Science, the Bodleian Library, Radcliffe Camera, Radcliffe Observatory and Radcliffe Humanities.

I would be very grateful if you could share details of this fun-filled event and help Oxford come alive on 29 September. Enclosed is a poster for your community noticeboard as well as some suggested text for newsletters, websites and social media.

For more information about the event, please visit www.curiositycarnival.org – you'll find a communications resource pack, with suggested web and newsletter text, images, suggested tweets and more at www.ox.ac.uk/curiosity-carnival/communications-resources
